PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION.

THERE is a need, and, it may be truthfully said, an urgent demand, for a Repertory which will enable the physician to find quickly and certainly any desired symptom in the Materia Medica, together with the indicated remedy.

The CONCORDANCE REPERTORY is designed to supply this demand.

The rules adopted for the preparation of the work are as follows:

FIRST: Select and give all the more characteristic pathogenetic symptoms.

SECOND: Include only such clinical symptoms as have been repeatedly verified.

THIRD: Where two or more remedies have the power of producing a similar condition, include them as merely suggestive, under the name of the condition produced.

FOURTH: Give the noun, verb, and essential adjective in the sentence.

These rules have been faithfully observed throughout.

The idea which finally gave origin to the work presented itself in the autumn of 1876. The author had found the remedy for a symptom which had necessitated a search in the *Materia Medica*s and Repertories for several days. The symptom which caused the search is: "Constant dull frontal headache, worse in the temples, with aching in the umbilicus," and that peculiarity made it difficult to find. After a weary search and final success in finding the remedy, the author exclaimed: "If we only had a Repertory arranged on the plan of Cruden's Concordance of the Bible, it would have been necessary only to refer to the letter U, and under 'umbilicus,' find at once the desired symptom." It was decided then that the attempt should be made to materialize the thought into actuality. It was a gigantic undertaking, and presented many difficulties; but, with the knowledge that such a work was required, and that the profession would cordially welcome its appearance, with a stout heart and a determined will the work was begun.

Cruden's Concordance of the Bible gives two or three words only in each sentence, necessitating a reference to the Bible to find the complete sentence. In this way all of that work is included in one volume. Such an arrangement was possible, as there is but one Bible; but such is not possible with the CONCORDANCE REPERTORY, as there are many *Materia Medica*s. In consequence of this fact, it was thought necessary in preparing this work to condense the phraseology of the symptoms whenever possible to do so, without altering the sense, thus rendering it generally unnecessary to refer to the Materia Medica. This necessitated the re-writing, many times over, of the symptoms of the Materia Medica, and of employing six large volumes in place of one.

In searching for any desired symptom, the physician should first express it mentally, or better, in writing, employing words commonly used, and then select the word in the sentence expressing the central thought, idea, fact, condition, or object of the sentence, or the noun, verb, or essential adjective, and referring in the CONCORDANCE to the word selected, the desired symptom may be found, unless a synonym has been selected, in which case other synonyms should be thought of. To illustrate this point: When shown the section of the CONCORDANCE REPERTORY relating to the female sexual organs, the distinguished author of a leading text-book saw the word "catamenia," and following only seven symptoms. He jumped at the conclusion that that composed all there was in the CONCORDANCE on that subject, and said: "Your work is not complete. There are very many more symptoms regarding the 'catamenia' than you have given." We replied that there are very few symptoms given in the Materia Medica with the word "catamenia" in them; that we did not feel authorized to change the phraseology of the Materia Medica, but that we had given the nouns, verbs, and adjectives in our work, in every instance as found in the Materia Medica, but that if he would look for "menses" and other synonyms, all would be found in the CONCORDANCE that could be found in the Materia Medica on the subject.

In selecting a word from any sentence expressing a symptom which is desired to be found, preference should always be given to a word expressing a condition, under the heading of which may be expected a classification of symptoms referring to the same organ or portion of the body. To illustrate, again: a symptom may be desired on the subject of "sad" or "sadness." Very few symptoms can be found under either of these words, because they are not used very often in the Materia Medica; and yet there are a great many symptoms regarding the condition. The failure to find the desired symptom under "sad" or "sadness," would raise the inquiry: "What is 'sad' or 'sadness'?" And the answer is: "It is depression of spirits." Then, besides looking at symptoms under "sad" or "sadness," also look at those under "spirits," "depression," and other synonyms.

As the work progressed, the important fact became apparent, that the arrangement and grouping of words and subjects would bring together all symptoms bearing on the same subject, or affecting the same portion of the body, so that the physician will have before the eye and mind, at the same time, for consideration and comparison, under the rubric of conditions and concomitants, all the more characteristic or reliable symptoms in the Materia Medica. The ocean of symptoms which flood the Materia Medica is brought by this arrangement under the command of the physician, so that the heretofore difficult art of accurate prescribing is made rapid and certain.

Year after year we have diligently labored, and patiently waited for the time to come when we could, as we now have the very great pleasure and satisfaction of doing, lay our completed work before the profession, confidently trusting that it will prove to be to the Materia Medica and the physician, what Cruden's Concordance is to the Bible and the theologian—an inseparable companion and helper.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION.

BECAUSE of the urgent demand of the profession for a more perfect and useful repertory than those formerly in use, the first edition of Volume One of the CONCORDANCE REPERTORY was hurriedly published, as compiled nearly fourteen years ago, with the exception of a few alterations and additions. The arrangement of symptoms under headings was not alphabetical, and the black letter headings in the text were not only unnecessary, but occupied space which could have been used to better advantage. In fact the volume, as published, though quite satisfactory, since with all its imperfections it was found better than old-style repertories, was at least ten years behind the time and very deficient in many respects. Besides, although fifteen hundred copies were printed, the edition was not sufficient to supply the demand, and it became necessary to reproduce this volume. In doing so it has been thought best to rewrite, revise, and make additions of all well-proven and characteristic symptoms, which have been verified since it was written, so as to bring the work up to date ; at the same time I have eliminated unnecessary headings and repetitions, and have incorporated some that were left out of the first edition by mistake.

To save space for convenience, and for comparison, the plan has been adopted in the revision of collecting under one general heading all reliable symptoms that can be found belonging to one remedy, in all *Materia Medica*s, and only giving under subordinate headings, in other portions of the section, so much of the collection of symptoms as pertains to the word selected as a heading, leaving it to the searcher to refer to the more general heading for a collection of all collateral symptoms pertaining to the same remedy, or for comparison with the symptoms bearing upon the same subject in other remedies. For instance : one remedy has a great many symptoms in which the word "headache" occurs. All symptoms of all remedies may be found collected under the general heading of "headache" in the CONCORDANCE, in the section devoted to the "Head and Scalp" ; but any one symptom of the collection of any one remedy can only be found under a subordinate heading, and for a complete collection or comparison of any symptom, with all other symptoms and all other remedies pertaining to the same general subject, it will be necessary to refer to the general heading.

With acknowledgments and thanks for former recognition and support, the second edition of the work, with its improvements and additions, is most respectfully offered to the profession.

Fraternally,

WILLIAM D. GENTRY.
